Tattoos and piercings can not only look cool, they can enhance sexual sensations

Kinky Tattooing & Piercing

Billions of dollars are spent every year on clothes, jewelry, cosmetics of all sorts, with one object in mind: to look good. The quest for a personal style, for an image that proclaims "I'm a unique individual," has preoccupied guys since time immemorial.

Two kinky ways of achieving individuality – tattooing and piercing— have enjoyed a renaissance and are worth taking a closer look at, from both an aesthetic and pleasure point of view.

Tattoos

Tattoos are one of the oldest and most universal art forms. Numerous references to tattooing appear in the works of ancient historians. The Old Testament prohibited tattoos (Leviticus 19:28), but for the ancient Greeks tattooing was a mark of the aristocracy, and for early Christians tattoos were a mark of faith. In 787 Pope Adrian I banned the practice as pagan and tattooing in the Middle Ages was regarded as a criminal activity, a mark of one's alliance with the powers of evil.

When the Europeans began exploring the world, they rediscovered tattooing in cultures from the Eskimos to the Incas; from the Chinese to the Tahitians. In 1862 the Prince of Wales (later King Edward VII) had a small cross tattooed on his arm. The prince was a trendsetter and soon fashionable Victorians—both men and women—flocked to tattoo artists. The fad spread to America, where its popularity increased in 1890 when New Yorker Samuel O'Reilly invented the electric tattoo machine. But after a few decades tattooing fell into disrepute, relegated to seedy seaport parlors.

In recent years however it has gained respectability and recognition as an art form in its own right. The art of tattooing has grown with the advancement of technology. The electric needles and the dyes used today enable the tattooist to achieve greater freedom in their designs and a wider spectrum in coloration. The modern machines are capable of making about 50 punctures a second, to a depth of between one-eighth and one-sixteenth of an inch. The two basic models are the outline machine, with one to seven needles, and the shader machine, with three to twelve or more needles in a cluster.

Once upon a time a person studied the designs that were displayed on the wall and let the tattooist go to work. Nowadays clients frequently create their own designs and the tattooist works with the customer to produce the desired image. Most tattooists have a background in art; they become attracted to tattoos as a different, more personal, artistic expression. Tattoos are viewed as "electric drawing" and as "living art." Spider Webb, once known as perhaps the most famous tattooist in the country, saw tattooing as "warm art."

Once the design is chosen, the tattooist prepares the stencil. The outline of the image is drawn on a plastic square with slow-drying ink. The area to be tattooed is shaved and smeared with Vaseline. The stencil is then pressed against the coated flesh, so the outline transfers to the Vaseline. With the outline machine, the artist begins to emboss the design into the skin. Outlines are almost always done in black, which shows up on the skin as dark blue, though it is possible to work in other colors.

Tattooing is generally thought to be a painful process. Indeed, part of its past attraction was the appeal to macho fantasies: "I'm a man, I can take the pain."

With modern equipment the process isn't as painful as it used to be. The sensation of tattooing has been commonly described as a burning feeling or as an unscratchableirritating series of mosquito bites. For most people the experience is no more painful than a blood test. But since needles are penetrating the skin, there is some bleeding. A few persons do faint while being tattooed, probably the same ones who pass out from a flu shot.

...the act of piercing and rings through the flesh can be tremendous turn-ons for many.

After the outline is finished the tattooist begins the coloring, which makes the body feel like it's being drawn on with sharp crayons. When the tattoo is finished it ls covered with an antibiotic ointment. During the healing period, about four to ten days, the tattoo should be kept medically lubricated to prevent infection and promote healing.

As the tattoo heals there will be some slight discomfort. The area will feel bruised and the skin will appear to peel.

Tattoos, in addition to their aesthetic qualities, have a practical use. Tattooists are sometimes called upon to use their art to disguise moles or unsightly scars. In such cases it's best to consult a doctor before getting a tattoo, even though most doctors would generally advise patients against getting tattooed.

Getting a tattoo should not merely be a matter of whim. Once a tattoo is on it becomes a permanent part of most wearers. Tattoos can be removed, however, most commonly by a practice called dermabrasion, which essentially sandpapers the tattoo away. After this process the skin never returns to its original appearance. Before getting tattooed in the first place, it is advisable to have no doubts that you are prepared to live with it for the rest of your life.

In a famous painting by Norman Rockwell, a young man is shown getting the name of his current girlfriend tattooed on his arm. Above the tattoo several other tattooed names are crossed out. Aside from you mother or a child, avoid having someone's name tattooed on your body. A tattoo proclaiming "I love Tracy" might make for some difficult situations after Tracy has become only the name of a former lover.

The cost of a tattoo depends on the size and intricacy of the design. They can take anywhere from 45 minutes to two hours to execute. More elaborate tattoos may cost several hundred dollars and require several sessions to complete.

Piercing

Piercing various parts of the body for adornment or decoration has enjoyed a long and colorful history. In many different cultures and eras, parts of the body were pierced for religious, social and sexual reasons. The Roman centurions, for example, routinely had their nipples pierced as both a sign of their courage—and an aid in holding their short capes on their bodies. But today, nipple piercing and other exotic holes are primarily for aesthetic and sexual purposes. Both the act of piercing and rings through the flesh can be tremendous turn-ons for many.

While piercing is primarily done today for sexual enhancement, it has been used to prohibit sex historically.

Ears and nipples are not the only pierceable parts of the body. In ancient Egypt navel piercing was considered a sign of royalty and the practice was denied to commoners. Though this specific piercing is not exactly sexually functional, a ring through the flap of skin above the navel has the visual effect of directing a viewer's attention down toward the genital area.

Several types of piercing involve the male genitals. Some people see a decorated cock as intriguing; others are turned off by what they view as a senseless mutilation of the body.

The Prince Albert piercing was once called a "dressing ring" in Victorian England. This pierce enters through the tip of the penis, penetrates the urethra, and exits on one side of the frenum, the web of flesh under the head of the cock. This piercing was originally used to secure a "proper" Victorian man's cock in either pant leg during that era's craze for extremely tight trousers. Legend has it that Queen Victoria's husband, Prince Albert, wore such a ring to retract his foreskin so it would not offend the queen. Today the function is strictly erotic; like a permanent French 'tickler, some lusty lovers claim.

Dydoes are of fairly recent origin. This piercing is done through both sides of the upper edge of the cockhead. The dydoe pierce serves to return much of the sensation that is lost when the foreskin is removed by circumcision.

The ampallang and the apadravya are both described in the Kama Sutra, the classic Hindu book of lovemaking techniques. The ampallang goes horizontally through the center of the head of the cock, above the urethra. The apadravya is angled through the shaft of the dick, behind the head but sometimes into the head itself. As might be expected, neither of these piercings is common.

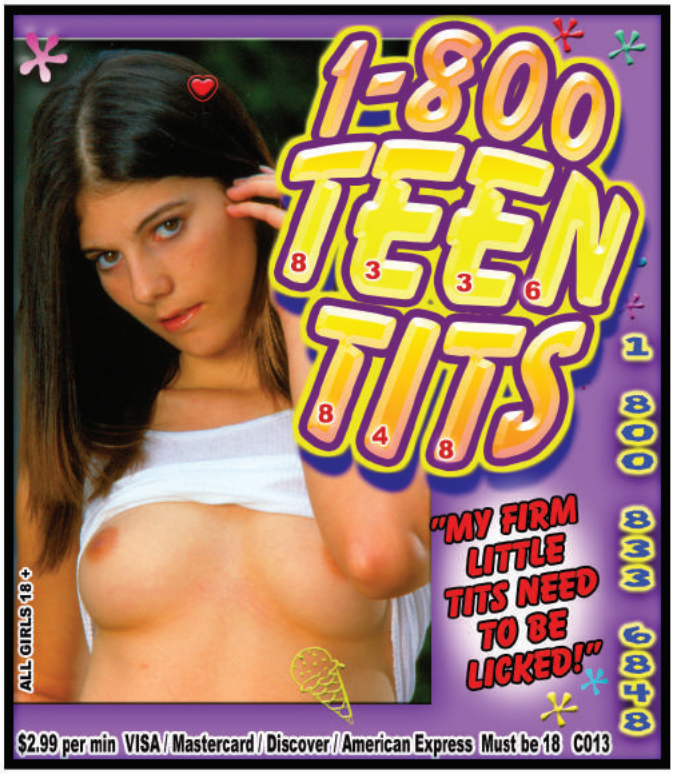

Piercing of the frenum has served the extremes of chastity and sexual stimulation. A padlock through the frenum will prevent fucking. Another device that can be secured at one end through the frenum, and at the other end through a second piercing at the base of the cock, also prevents masturbation. By contrast, a ring which passes through the piercing in the frenum and encircles the head, fitting snugly but comfortably in the groove around the glans, can be extremely erotic and helps to stimulate an erection much like a cock ring.

It is a proud day in the life of an Arab youth when he takes part in a ceremony that signifies his achievement of manhood. A "coming of age" stag party is arranged by his male relatives and friends, and one of the gifts is a silver stud or ornamental ring. At a ritual piercing this ring will be inserted through the left side of the scrotum, between the testicle and the base of the penis. Believed to prevent the testes from ever returning to the groin, from which they descended, the hafada piercing gives visual evidence that the youth has become, now and forever, a man.

Some wealthy Arabs still install hafadas set with precious stones. French Foreign Legionnaires have reportedly returned from North Africa wearing this genital adornment, usually only on the left side but occasionally on both sides. This piercing is quick and not particularly painful, although the healing period is somewhat prolonged. While not the most erotic of piercings, the hafada does provide some stimulation when stroked.

As you may know, genital piercing is not a practice that is restricted to just men. Plenty of women sport nipple or vaginal piercings—of the vulva or clitoris.

Gold is the most elegant choice for jewelry worn through a body piercing, but some veterans of piercing prefer stainless steel.

The guiche is a very common pierce among male natives in the South Pacific. The piercing is done, usually at puberty, through the raphe perineum, the ridge of skin between the scrotum and the anus. A knife point is used to make a tiny slit, through which a rawhide thong is drawn. Less primitive people who have adopted this device use more conventional piercing tools, with rings or studs. Either way, when the healing is complete in six to eight weeks, a bangle is attached to enhance sensation. Piercing advocates believe that the guiche is the most erotic of all piercings. Light pressure applied to the piercing greatly increases arousal and gentle tugging at the ring during fucking prolongs and intensifies the orgasm.

While piercing is primarily done today for sexual enhancement, it has been used to prohibit sex historically. When used for the purpose of chastity, the practice is commonly called infibulation. Ancient Roman male slaves were often pierced through the foreskin, and some puritanical Victorians similarly pierced young boys to prevent "the onerous sin of self-pollution."

One man who sports several genital piercings explains, "I think there are four chief pleasures to be gained from the practice: the decorative quality of the jewelry is enjoyable to look at; a deep-felt need to experiment with the possibilities of the body is fulfilled; the piercings are a form of secret bondage between partners; and sexual feelings are enhanced."

Gold is the most elegant choice for jewelry worn through a body piercing, but some veterans of piercing prefer stainless steel. This metal gives off high luster when polished a does not rust, tarnish or corrode. No damage is done to the jewelry by body fluids or saltwater. Stainless steel is hypoallergenic. Be advised however that many earrings advertised as hypoallergenic only have stainless posts with a metal pendant or ornament that can cause allergic reactions. Some fans of piercing consider 100 percent stainless steel "the Rolls Royce of metals."

Tired of your old Image? Why not get a tattoo, or get your cock pierced?

Special note:

Ear piercing is a relatively simple procedure, but when piercing other parts of the body great care is needed. Before attempting any type of piercing, all equipment and jewelry must be sterilized by an autoclave or pressure cooker. Boiling, or just holding objects under a flame, is not enough to kill infectious hepatitis germs. The area to be pierced must be cleaned with alcohol. Flat surfaces and veins must never be pierced. Surgical gloves should be worn by the piercer. Be sure they are! After piercing the area must be washed twice daily and the ring or stud rotated. A mild antiseptic such as hydrogen peroxide and an antibiotic such as Neosporin must be applied. All types of piercings, like tattooing, should only be done by someone with experience. Some tattooists are also piercers. Neither practice is an amateur sport.

THIS IS HOW TO SPEND A GREAT AFTERNOON

MOUTHS AND PUSSIES AND COCKS, OH MY!

BOOKMARK BUTT BANG

We had taken Madeline's car.

As representatives of the municipal library system it wouldn't have looked good for us to roll up in my twenty-year-old hatchback with missing hubcaps, faded paint, and a cracked windshield. Not that Madeline made more money than I did. The snazzy German sedan had been made possible by her successful lawyer husband.

It was a spacious Tudor style house in the college district. The recently deceased owner, a rabid bibliophile with an extensive collection, had stipulated in his will that all books be donated to the library. Well, not necessarily all of them. Madeline and I would determine which ones were suitable.

The deceased had been a sickly widower requiring around the clock care provided by a live-in home health nurse named Helen. A statuesque blonde with piercing blue eyes, Helen met Madeline and I on the porch before leading us to the library.

The place was impressive. I had no idea what the old guy had done for a living, but it had paid well. I thought of my seedy apartment, the best I could do on my pitifully low salary. I was jealous of Madeline. Had it not been for the rich hubby she would have been one of my fellow tenants. What I needed was a rich wife to take care of me. Wife? That's a laugh. I didn't even have a girlfriend.

"Here we are." Helen regarded the floor to ceiling shelves with nonchalance. "Take the time you need."

"Thank you so much," Madeline said. "We really appreciate it."

Helen left us to our work. Madeline and I had done this sort of thing before. It was a painstaking chore. One book at a time. Yes or no? We wore rubber gloves. Thankfully the library had been well maintained; there was no dust to speak of so we didn't have to don those damnable masks which made it difficult to breathe.

"Let the fun begin," I said, pulling the first tome from the shelf.

It was going to be a long day.

We had been hard at it for an hour when I went outside to smoke a cigarette. Standing on the porch, I lit up and peered at Madeline's plush ride. The backseat was loaded with empty liquor boxes; plenty, I reasoned, for the job. I thought about bringing them inside, then rejected this idea. There would be time for that later.

I finished my cigarette and returned to the library. I don't know what in the hell had happened in my absence, but it must've been bad because Madeline and Helen were engaged in an argument.

"How dare you accuse me of—"

"I saw you with my own two eyes!" Helen pointed an accusatory finger in Madeline's face. "Now hand it over. You have no right to take—"

"Hey, hey," I said, "settle down."

Helen's blue eyes had turned icy; she turned them on me and said, "Your colleague's a thief. She found a hundred dollars inside a book and slipped it inside her purse. I caught her red handed."

"She's lying," Madeline said. "I have no idea what she's talking about."

Of course I believed Madeline. What with her rich hubby and all she hardly needed the money. Surely Helen was mistaken. Or so I thought until Madeline accidently dropped her purse and the pilfered bill fluttered to the floor.

Her face turned red. Helen, arms crossed across her well endowed chest, smirked triumphantly. How, I wondered with increasing panic, are we going to settle this unfortunate debacle? I had no earthly idea.

But Helen did.

Boy did she ever!

Turns out she had a real kinky side.

The nurse would neglect to report the incident to our boss, would even let Madeline keep the money if we would be so accommodating as to provide her with some live entertainment; life with her late employer, she said, had been mind numbingly boring and she was dying for some action . . .

Madeline surprised me when she agreed to the plan. The surprise must've been etched all over my face because she looked at me and shrugged. "What can

I say? Steve is never home. And when he is he's far too tired for sex. I haven't been properly fucked in months . . ."

"Then it's settled," Helen remarked excitedly, removing her scrubs.

"Oh, yes, that's it. Fuck her good. She's been a very bad girl," Helen said from her late employer's plush reading chair. She had one long leg draped over the padded arm rest, her muscular thighs parted as she sat there and fucked herself with a massive dildo.

Madeline had surprised me further by exhibiting a talent for sloppy blowjobs. Sucking me to the brink of orgasm, she had wisely relented and assumed the doggy position on the floor.

Now, having lifted her skirt and pushed her lace panties aside, I pounded her from the rear. My gaze was torn between Madeline's skinny bum and Helen's masturbatory hijinks. The nurse had big tits, too. She kneaded and caressed the ample flesh with her free hand, working herself into a lustful frenzy.

Fingertips digging into Madeline's bony hips, I thrust repeatedly, plunging my cock into her tight cunt. Helen had repositioned herself in the chair; turning around, she had assumed the doggy position. Watching us over her shoulder, she arched her spine and raised her big white ass. With a deftness acquired through years of experience, she extracted the dildo from her pussy and pushed it inside her asshole.

This gave Madeline a wonderful idea. "Fuck me in the ass," she urged me. "I want you to come in my dirty little bunghole . . ."

She didn't have to ask me twice. I pulled out of her cunt and entered her other hole. Madeline's was a snug starfish. It felt amazing wrapped around my hard dick. I won't last long, I thought, reaming her compact caboose with short, quick jabs.

I withdrew with seconds to spare, and dumped a sizable load of cum on her taut cheeks. Helen removed the toy from her rear end; sitting upright, she smiled approvingly.

"Fantastic performance," she remarked. "You two are something else!"

We were heading back to the library, the backseat filled with boxes of books, when Madeline stopped at a red light and said, "I'm a klepto."

I didn't say anything.

"I didn't need the money," she continued. "It's the thrill. Doing something forbidden. I get off on the risk."

"So you've done this before?" I asked her.

"All the time," she told me, "but I've never been caught."

"Until today."

"Yeah," she said. "Until today. I'm glad, though. Otherwise we would've never fucked. And I really needed to get laid."

"Same here," I told her.

Unfortunately we never hooked up again. Still, I couldn't be too sore at Madeline. After all, she let me have the hundred bucks!

MOVE-IN DAY

FATHERS, the sign read, DROP YOUR DAUGHTERS OFF HERE!

It was cardboard, the instructions rendered in black paint, and propped against the rickety porch railing of the frat house.

I thought it was hilarious. Of course I kept this opinion to myself. Last thing I needed on Move-In Day was a heated argument with Dear Old Dad.

"Punks." Dad's meaty hands squeezed the steering wheel. "I forbid you from associating with such riffraff."

He was referring to the three frat boys drinking beer on the porch. Dad didn't care for their sign, not one damned bit. The man had no sense of humor. Dad could be a real pain in the ass. He was gruff and strict and overly protective. He had wanted me to stay at home and attend the community college—but I had stood my ground and adamantly refused.

Now he was helping me move in to the freshmen dormitory. It felt good to finally be on my own. I couldn't wait to watch Dad drive away. Enough was enough.

"There it is," I told him, pointing at the drab brick building which was to be my new home. He wheeled to the curb and killed the engine. I moved to open the door but he reached over and stopped me.

"I'm serious about what I said, Laurel. Stay away from those frat boys. You're here to get an education, not party with a bunch of drunken degenerates."

He peered at me in silence, then cracked a rare smile. "I can't believe it," he said, shaking his head in dismay. "My little girl is going to college."

Dad had forked over the extra cash to secure me a private room, so I didn't have to worry about a roommate. A good thing, this, as I could decorate every inch of space to reflect my personality.

My stuff was scattered all over the floor and narrow twin bed. Later, I thought. There would be plenty of time to tidy up tomorrow. I went to the bathroom at the end of the hall and took a shower. Wrapped in a towel, I returned to my room and changed into my most revealing outfit—a bikini top, skimpy denim shorts, and sandals.

Then I left my room and walked to fraternity row.

Dad's "punks" were still on the porch when I introduced myself. Six eyes undressed me as I stood there on the front steps and regarded their cardboard sign.

"Fathers," I read, "drop your daughters off here."

"She can read," said the shortest of the bunch.

"One of my many talents," I replied.

"What else can you do?" asked the shirtless one wearing a red trucker cap.

"I can drink beer," I said.

They cracked up. The freckled redhead reached into their ice chest and plucked a cold one. "Bottoms up."

I popped the tab and took a hefty swig. The beer was cold and good. It was also the first of many. By dusk I was feeling mighty fine, and more than a little brazen.

"Let's take this party inside," I told them, "where we can have some real fun."

The front room had been cleared of furniture to make room for a pool table. The prospect excited me. I had never done it on a pool table. Hell, I had never done it anywhere except for the backseat of my boyfriend's car.

"Come on guys," I said. "Let's get those clothes off."

They undressed hastily. I lifted my butt onto the edge of the pool table and lay there atop the soft green felt. I didn't care who went first. They mumbled amongst themselves and came to an agreement. Trucker Cap got first crack at me; he flashed an ear to ear grin as he peeled my cotton panties. I spread my legs in eager anticipation of his hard cock. The frat boy didn't disappoint. He fucked me as good as I had ever been fucked. His was a rough style, a jabbing motion which turned me on something fierce.

His pals hooted and hollered as he neared the end. I was twisting and pinching my nipples when he pulled out and released his load on my taut tummy.

"Your turn," he uttered, out of breath, to the redhead.

I had never banged a ginger before. Yet another new experience compliments of college!

His dick wasn't as big as Trucker Cap's, but he knew how to use it all the same. He fucked me slowly, pushing every last inch of his member into my cunt before backing out and doing it all over again. He picked up the pace gradually until, his freckled face twisted with exertion, he was pounding me at a merciless clip.

Trucker Cap pumped his fist. "Pound that freshman pussy!"

"Oh, shit!" the redhead groaned, pulling out and adding his spunk to Trucker Cap's.

That left Shorty, the poor guy. I say this because he wasn't tall enough to fuck me, not standing beside the pool table he wasn't. But he improvised by going down on me instead. His was a most talented tongue. He licked and lapped my pussy, never failing to lavish my clit with attention. His deft ministrations had me writhing and panting as I experienced an explosive orgasm.

We got dressed and returned to the porch. It was dark out. Trucker Cap offered me another beer but I declined.

"Thanks for the warm welcome," I told them in parting. "My name's Laurel, by the way. You'll definitely be seeing more of me this semester."

I headed back to my dorm, wincing with each painful step. Shit, I thought, at this pace it'll take me all night. Those frat boys had fucked me so good I could barely walk.
